Chapter 1 by TDA

No one knows how I function. Some call me psychopath, others freak. To tell you the truth, I had no idea they would make a whole TV series about me, and the famous set of books that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle made to convey the name of the most famous detective in existence. When you might see the first episode of the BBC show Sherlock, you will have your mouth hanging so far down, even the Abu Dhabhi won't be able to top it off.

Yet, here is the question everybody asks- how does my brain function? Though it might not seem so, on the inside, I am very organized. My brain is like a computer, creating files for sorting thoughts and facts. It does this so that when it is needed, it is available. I read and memorize many articles and maps weekly.

How do I use this to solve mysteries? Well, I use my now-cluttered brain to sort through my Mind Palace, and look through the many files to see which one would fit the scene. I also have excellent eyesight, and also am very observant. Also, one would include the name of John Hamish Watson. He is my loyal companion, and his medical skills are very useful for our mysteries, and he proves to pay having in company. I just hope he doesn't bring back the mustache....
